PIERCED BY BULLETS. A Recent Arrival From Victoria Found Dead Near Port Angeles.

News comes from Port Angeles that the body of C. Link, a recent arrival from Victoria, was found lying on the bank of a small creek about eight miles distant from that town on Friday morning last.

The first intimation of the tragedy received in this city was that brought by Customs Inspector Fisher, who after arrival on the steamer Garland on Saturday afternoon, had searched all over the city before finally locating the place where the man had stopped while here.

As it is in Britain so it is in Canada. Men who are not advanced in years know that a tremendous revolution in sentiment has taken place within the period covered by their experience.

Further particulars of death brought out at the coroner's inquest, which was to have been held at Port Angeles, are expected to be received by this afternoon's Sound steamer.

MOBILIZATION AT THE POINT. Militia Will Carry Out Manoeuvres On Labor Day.

Although nothing official has yet been given out, it is understood that the manoeuvres which were so successfully carried out last year at Esquimalt by the Coast militia, with the active co-operation of the regular forces stationed at Work Point, will be repeated this year.

However, as Labor Day seems to have been set for the training, the latter obstacle would not appear to be serious, as most of the business houses will be closed for the day.

The manoeuvres for Monday are not yet decided, but the Fifth Regiment will probably issue the guns, in conjunction with the R. G. A., which the rifles will act as infantry supports, and if the programme of last year be repeated, as previous and scouting parties. It is expected that this year a more realistic element will be introduced into the manoeuvres.

Last year a Co. 3rd R. C. R., was detailed to attempt a surprise on the Red Hill forts, and this may be repeated this year by a detachment of the Rifles.

The latter will return to Vancouver by special boat on Monday evening.

Evidence of Prisoners

Webber, the Head Trusty, Continues His Statement Before Jail Commission.

Why Witness Warned the Warden—The Cook Also Gives Evidence.

The prisoner Webber, the head trusty, continuing his evidence before the royal commission at New Westminster jail on Thursday said: Marshall carried food in the evenings. Saw Marshall carry papers to Rosy. Witness had carried a parcel from Rosy to Dupuy. They were French newspapers. He went to her cell and asked for them. Marshall said she had given them to Dupuy. She did some cooking; saw her cooking once when he took in the coal. She is supposed to have passed liquor out through her window. Did not see any prisoners drunk. He talked to Carmelita in the women's department. He entered by using a piece of brass. He was only in there about four minutes. He and Dupuy used an improvised telegraph instrument for practice. They practiced in his cell. Never used any other key. Marshall did not take any key with him. He asked witness for a key for the women's ward. He replied he could make a key to fit any lock.

On June 2nd, witness used his own key and went in. When he came out Marshall was in the office. Witness told him the door was open and Marshall locked the door with the key witness gave him. He knew witness wanted to go in. He arranged to go down the hallway with witness. The cook was there too, for a blind, he said. He took no notes to Rosy knowingly, though once in a parcel perhaps there was one. Marshall carried the notes. Guard O'Connor gave him a key for the box in his cell; it saved witness the trouble of making a key. He also made a key for the lock on his cell. Marshall carried the papers from Rosy to Dupuy's cell, next to witness's cell, about the middle of March. Dupuy told him Marshall was a go-between from him to Rosy. Witness saw Rosy give him a parcel for Dupuy and take it to him. Witness gave Rosy some tobacco once. Possibly she gave it to Dupuy. Fleming told him he wrote to Rosy, but did not show the letter to him. The one produced commencing "Rosy I love you" had not been shown him. Fleming did not tell him he had made an appointment with Rosy. Witness recalled writing to "Ida." Witness said he had made four or five keys; did not know whether Marshall one for O'Connor and the rest for himself. The cook told him that Marshall wanted him to make a key for the other door to the women's ward. He knew Marshall was wanting to catch him at it, but started to make it anyway. He preferred the other door himself; access was easier. Marshall wanted to catch witness in the women's ward. When he did see him coming out, Marshall said he would not report it. He was forced to copy some vouchers for things, Marshall having a hold on him. He surmised, through Marshall, that there would be an investigation, and then wrote a warning to the warden. On June 2nd, the lights were not lighted when he went to the women's ward. He knew Marshall wanted to give him a chance to try. While he was with Carmelita, Rosy called Marshall, and she gave him a parcel for Dupuy. Marshall said he would deliver, and started off, but he did not go. He returned and caught witness coming out, as he had planned to do. He started to take something to hold over witness. He had a friendly feeling for the warden, but was leary of getting into trouble over getting into the women's ward himself. He warned the warden against the underhand work of Marshall, who was trying to get the warden out. All the prisoners have tobacco, and can easily get it. Marshall asked him to make copies of certain vouchers. Marshall was trying to make out that the warden was appropriating government supplies. Every day, as soon as the warden went down town, Marshall would talk these matters over with him, and ask him not to say anything to the warden. He had his knife into him. The warden often goes into the jail every day. Did not report these matters to the warden. Marshall always told him he was only getting information to defend himself from the warden. Later, witness found out otherwise and warned the warden of Marshall's malicious underhand work. Had been outside the jail, nor did he know of any one making an appointment to meet any one down town, except a man who was planning to get out. This man was watched too closely, however; the warden having heard of it. One day Marshall locked up a Chinaman in the wing, but left his keys in the front door and left the office door open also. Witness and the cook thought of frightening him by hiding in the dark and pretending to have escaped. Witness lived on prison fare, supplemented by things he bought or were sent by friends from the Upper Country.

To Mr. Dockrill: Marshall took two letters out and two in for him. The bottle produced was left in Dupuy's cell. It was supposed to have been passed through. It was carried by Marshall from Rosy's to McCarty's cell, between 11 p. m. on the 4th and 3 a. m. on July 5th. He knew the women had whiskey. He saw by the reflection of his looking-glass that it was Marshall passing the light. Marshall knew witness had files, because he was making keys for him. Marshall promised witness he would get $25 for him if he would not testify about the keys, and that C. P. R. Operator Wilson would intercede with Chief Justice McCall for Webber.

Witness here wanted to telephone Wilson to see if Marshall had spoken to him, but Supt. Hussey undertook this and asked Mr. Wilson to come up to the jail.

H. A. Wilson, C. P. R. telegraph agent, sworn: Did not know Webber; never saw him. He had asked him for some magazines, both belonging to the same order. Guard Marshall asked witness last week to lend Webber $25. He said he wanted to give Webber a start when he got out. This was perhaps two weeks ago.

Guard Marshall: Webber sent him to borrow $25 to engage a lawyer to get him out at half-time. Wilson said he would not lend it to Webber, but he would to his mother, as he knew her years ago, when he went to Hammond. Resuming in the evening, Frank Dupuy was sworn. He had been trusty for the past five months. Did not know Webber before coming. Marshall brought him food at night, after 6 o'clock, from Rosy Gaynor. Some she cooked herself. He would bring him also a French newspaper from her and he would enclose a note to Rosy when returning them. This was both before and since he was trusty. Before he was trusty, the food was not had at first; later the soup was very poor. Vegetables were very scarce, and evidently not over clean. Carrots were used. Some greens used made the soup look nasty. He did not complain to Rosy of bad food. He told her he felt the change of diet from outside. She offered him some things, and said that Marshall would take them. Did not see anything lowered from a window to the yard. He heard about it. When he had the next cell to Webber, they used to telegraph to each other. Webber had taken no messages to Rosy for him. Lately Webber told him he had been in the women's yard. He said he was only in once, and that Marshall had told him where to get the keys, and he got them. He said May Evans was there. Witness had never seen her. Webber told him he went into May's cell. Rosy was in there also. Webber told him he was drunk on July 4th. He said the cook had been drinking with them, and that it was through Marshall they got the liquor. Since the investigation, Webber and Marshall had a grievance against each other. Before that they were good friends. He had no occasion to complain of his treatment as a prisoner. Turnbull always keeps the big iron gate into the jail closed; Marshall kept it open. He locks it now, but not formerly. O'Connor sometimes left it open also. Saw the warden every morning. Often he stayed all morning, and was down among the gang. Every Sunday he visited all the cells. He never reported about Webber making keys, but he warned him not to "monkey" about locks, or he would get into trouble.

To Mr. Dockrill: About five days ago Webber told him about being in the women's ward to see May at night. He did not mention Carmelita. Correcting himself witness said Carmelita was the girl Webber said he visited, not May Evans.

Webber recalled: Told Dupuy about the key made for the lock on his cell. Also about that time he told him of visiting Carmelita. Carmelita Hildebrand, sworn, said she had been visited by Webber. He had only come once and stayed scarcely ten minutes. They were not in the cell. He must have had a key to get in. She thought Marshall took the key from Webber. Marshall and Rosy were talking a good deal. While she and Webber were chatting in the bath room, Rosy was reading a paper by her cell. Marshall collared Webber as he stepped out into the office. She was talking with Marshall about Webber. No one else had been in the ward while she was there. Marshall sometimes talked to her, but only on business. Both she and Rosy cooked. They had nearly everything they wanted. She could have got liquor and cigarettes but did not want them.

To Mr. Dockrill: She thought she had more than one talk with Marshall through the wicket about Webber. She was not surprised Webber visited her. He told her that afternoon that he was coming in to see her if he could manage it.

The Cook: Resuming on Friday, Richard Fleming, the jail cook, was sworn. May Evans and Rosy gave him some coffee in the women's ward when he was there. McKinnon was late he passed food to them, but this was generally done by the guard or trusty, at noon or 6 p. m. The women cooked their own breakfasts. He had generally made coffee and toast for them out of their own supplies. After May went out he wrote notes to Rosy and passed them in. When Marshall was on guard, he passed them in. As Marshall never objected, he saw her give food to Marshall to give to some of the prisoners. Webber ate in the kitchen generally; Turnbull took two meals when on duty. The letters to Rosy, produced, were written by him. These were full of terms of endearment, and he assured Rosy his love was respectful not like that of others in the jail. The others he had in mind were Collins. He knew Marshall and Webber had keys by which they could get in the women's ward. One time before Rosy went out witness was in the office when Webber passed through into the women's ward. When he came out Marshall caught him. Marshall knew he was there. He had asked witness to let him know so as he could get a hold over him. But witness did not tell him, he only told him Webber was around. Rosy gave Marshall a note for Dupuy and he started to go when Webber came out. Marshall then jumped on witness for not telling him. Cathcart and McKenzie were writing a letter to Mr. Hussey, complaining of something. Cathcart took the letter to Marshall up stairs to post for him. When McKenzie got in the dark cell, Marshall wrote witness between 4 and 4:30 a. m. and opened his door. He asked witness to cook something for the man in the dark cell. He gave him tea, toast, meat and plum duff. Marshall opened the door for him, but did not accompany him to the dark cell. Marshall asked him not to say anything about it for it might get to the warden's ear.

Another time he went to the kitchen early and found Mr. Collins, no fire, no anything. The guard knew nothing, but witness suspected him of being with Rosy.

Collins was always talking with Rosy about a scheme to make the warden pay $250. Rosy was supposed to tell him witnesses to accuse the governor with. They said they had the key to Marshall's cell to take them and if Marshall went back on them they could fix him too.

About 6 p. m., three days before Rosy went out, the laundry man told witness to go to the office to see the two new bookkeepers. He went and saw Blackie
